CAs begin their careers in public practice working for a chartered accounting firm. Here you're exposed to everything – tax, audit, personal financial planning, computer consulting, business valuation, bankruptcy and fraud investigations. Being a CA is hard work, but the right pay-off, the challenge, the excitement and the rewards make it worth the effort. By the time you've earned the right to put the letters CA behind your name, you've shown everyone, including employers, that you have what it takes to succeed in business and in life.

Completing your degree is the first step in becoming a CA. Your academic training will provide you with components that cover the basic technical material in audit, financial accounting and taxation.
