The First Nations and Aboriginal Counselling program was physically housed in the School of Health Studies in 1999. The program is administered by a steering committee, which includes a broad cross section of academics, counsellors, elders, and representatives from First Nations and Aboriginal communities and professional associations. The Dean of Health Studies is the Chair of the Steering Committee. The program is formulated using First Nations and Aboriginal holistic approaches to counselling, healing, and community.

Office Files
Files regarding budgets, general financial activities, committee minutes, policies and procedures, correspondence, and other administrative records.