

Master of Education: Curriculum and Pedagogy

The Curriculum and Pedagogy stream is a flexible program of study that will enable educators to examine and enhance their understandings of curriculum and pedagogy. It invites educators to deepen and enrich their knowledge of curriculum as it is broadly conceived. The stream also supports areas of specialization through the process of critical inquiry or inquiry-based learning. This stream is particularly suited to those educators who wish to become instructional leaders and learning specialists.

The majority of our Curriculum and Pedagogy "required" courses are currently scheduled on-campus or via distance, largely dependent on the instructor per: course/term/year. For those that live at a distance from our campus and who are unable to drive in for the weekly evening classes, they may request connection via Zoom (video conference), if available, and as scheduled by the respective instructor.

Note: The above information is subject to change.

Please verify current Master of Education program via our website at:

<https://www.brandonu.ca/education-graduate-studies/graduate-level-programs/>