

Master of Education: Educational Administration

The Master of Education Educational Administration degree program enables current and aspiring educational leaders to enhance their leadership capacity. Students will critically engage in contemporary educational issues related to leadership praxis, school change, mentorship, case law, policy, supervision and social inclusion. This stream is particularly suited to those educators who wish to become instructional leaders, school administrators or leaders in school systems.

The majority of our Educational Administration “required courses” may be completed on-campus or via distance delivery. Some of the courses that may be delivered at a distance will include a webinar platform (e.g. Zoom video conference), and are conducted synchronously during evening or weekend sessions, depending on the instructor (based on Central Standard Time). Attendance during face-to-face and synchronous web-based courses is required to complete this program.
